

S T A D I U M A I R R A I D INSTRUCTIONS

The following plan, prepared with the advice of the Western Defense Command and civilian defense authorities, requires your complete cooperation in event an air raid alarm is given during today's game:

- Immediate announcement will be made over the public address system.
- The game will be halted for three minutes to permit air raid wardens and others whose duties require them to be elsewhere to leave the stadium.
 The game will then be resumed.
- 3. REMEMBER an alarm does not necessarily mean enemy planes are overhead. It is intended, rather, to permit defense organizations to "get set" for a possible attack. Your duty is to stay calmly where you are, avoid causing unnecessary confusion, and await further instructions from the announcer.
- 4. Stadium gates will be open and you will be free to leave, however, rigid traffic restrictions will go into effect when an alarm is sounded. You will not be permitted to move your automobile. All public transportation will be halted.
- 5. If you must leave the game, even though you have no duties elsewhere, please stay off city streets. Leave them free for those who have definite jobs to do. You can best be of service in an emergency situation—and be safest—by remaining in your seat. If you feel compelled to leave, the best place for you is the University campus which lies north and west of the Stadium.

WHICH WILL

"STRONG offense against a stubborn defense" should aptly describe today's game.

California, though a bit tardily, has developed one of the most potent attacks on the Coast, averaging 260 yards for five games!

The "piece de resistance" this afternoon is Oregon, a team that yields yardage most grudgingly.

The Webfoots' record speaks for itself. Their stubborn and beefy line has slowed down every offense to face it, including the vaunted Navy Pre-Flight School juggernaut that resorted to a field goal in the closing seconds to eke out victory.

Two of the finest ends on the Coast, Jim Shephard and Russ Nowling, Left Guard Floyd Rhea and Right Tackle Dick Ashcom are the stalwarts of the big forward wall.

Shephard and Nowling are, further, offensive threats when on the receiving end of Bob Reynold's accurate passes. The latter, a triple-threat sophomore, is such an offensive asset that Coach John Warren has moved his hitherto best running back, Tommy Roblin, to quarterback in order to have both men in the same backfield.

Another weapon at Oregon's disposal of defensive as well as offensive value, is Roblin's long range kicking. More than once this season, his kicks have sailed 80 yards. Against Washington State, he booted one for 87 yards from scrimmage!

BETHECASE?

Inasmuch as California is favorite, her outlook for today is not gloomy despite the apparent prowess of the opposition. The favorite role is a new one for the Golden Bears, a role that can be ascribed to the sudden appearance of strong offensive power.

The scoring punch that threatened to blossom in the O.S.C., Santa Clara and U.C.L.A. contests, burst into full bloom against Washington last week. The showing in that game stamped the Bears as a tough club to beat from here on in.

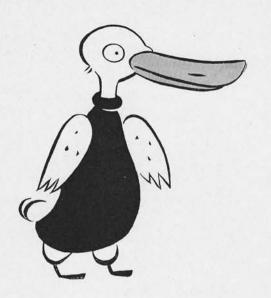

Two important factors in this renaissance of California power are the return of Joltin' Jim Jurkovich to competition after a leg injury and the "overnight" development of Frank Porto into a sharp-blocking and hard-running fullback. A passing threat replacement for Jurkovich is Southpaw Gene Pickett. Burly Johnny Graves at right half and Dan McCarthy at quarterback round out the probable starting backfield.

Oregon's main problem today is to stop the Bear ground attack; California's to nullify the Webfoot passing game.

Which will be the case?

of it than any other reserve or "B" squad on the Pacific coast can boast—comes to Berkeley to meet the California Freshmen in today's preliminary.

In fact the Naval Pre-Flight School "B" team has probably more stars than the average varsity can field. There's Bob Ramsauer, ex-California end; Carl Merritt, burly tackle from U.S.C.; Les Dow, three years a star at College of Pacific; Bob Hayes, outstanding tackle from Loyola; end Leo Cantwell of U.C.L.A., just to mention a few.

Fresh from a 13-6 defeat of the Stanford frosh, the Pre-Flighters face a once-beaten freshman eleven, who had their otherwise perfect record spoiled two weeks ago at the hands of U.S.C. in Los Angeles.

In today's encounter, the frosh face the second Navy outfit they have played to date. From all indications the Pre-Flighters will furnish the competition that was lacking when the Cubs waltzed over the Treasure Island eleven, 33-0.

The freshmen also boast talent, though quite naturally lacking in experience in comparison with their opponents. Ordinarily the Cub backfield is paced by big Newell Oestreich, who until recently has been on the injured list and may not start. However, Paul Keckley has been moved from full to left half and Tom Fleischman, a standout last week against Troy, will open at full. Reserves are plentiful in speed and power. Louie Jurkovich and John Reginato are two who are likely to be rushed into the game any time the going gets tough.

Both teams deploy wide open offenses and the result should be a high scoring contest.

SCOUTING

T PROBABLY isn't true that the football player, when asked by his history professor to name the two best scouts in history, replied:

"Kit Carson and Walt Gordon."

And it isn't true that football scouting is as important as the scouting that carved out a home in the West for the American people. But it is true that scouting plays an important role in the molding of a winning football team. It is almost unheard of these days for two major teams to meet without having previously scouted each other thoroughly.

How does a scout go about the business of scouting and how does it help to win games? A good way to find out is to ask Walt Gordon and Nibs Price, California's scouts.

"Scouting means looking over a future opponent to discover his offense, defense and the ability of his personnel," Nibs explained. "When a coach has this information he can more intelligently plan his strategy."

"We can teach the reserves a few basic plays to give the varsity an idea of what it will be up against," said Walt. "It's just as important to keep the opposing team from scoring as it is to score; and this is one of the best ways of doing it. A coach may have to revamp his usual defense in order to stop a particular attack; or he may have to change personnel to get the best defenders against a certain offense.

"Much the same holds true for the opponent's defense. We can school the scrubs in the enemy defense and then a coach can determine which players and what type of plays are best suited to make headway against that particular defense. Once in a while a scout may see a weakness that could be taken advantage of by using a specialized attack."

Gordon and Price agreed that the easiest part of scouting is the spotting of personnel.

"When the team comes out on the field for the pre-game warmup, we get busy noting down all the passers and punters, including * * * * * the substitutes. We notice which men are long passers, which specialize in short ones and so forth," said Nibs.

"We pass this information on to the coach. Then, for example, when No. 85, Joe Doakes, is tailback for the opposition, the quarter-back would be safe in calling for a tight defense because Doakes is no threat as a passer. We may observe that an opponent's weakness at guard won't do us any good because the line backer is quick enough to cover up the hole. Occasionally we may be able to spot a player who gives away the play by his actions. However, this is a rare instance these days and it is unwise to depend on such tip-offs."

Walt then explained how he goes about gathering the information needed:

"The coach usually gives us some special instructions. For the first part of the game we devote all our attention to the offense. This includes the use of a balanced or unbalanced line and the backfield formations. Then we chart the plays.

"This is easier than it seems because a scout usually knows what system the team is employing. With this familiarity we know that there are only so many possibilities in a certain formation. A good scout can even tell what type of a block was put on a man by the way the blocker gets back up on his feet. This helps us pick out the line blocking assignments.

"The defense is studied next," Walt continued. "We note the general defensive setup and then pick out the individual men. We look for weaknesses in pass defense, on the ends or down the middle, which linemen charge and which play a waiting game.

"One close scouting of a club usually isn't considered enough. Every opponent is scouted at least twice and some schools even scout their opponents all season."

So while you may be surprised this afternoon, it is doubtful that the coaches will raise their eyebrows.
